The Leaders of Tomorrow (LOT) Program is the NBMBAA's premier initiative directed toward the youth of our nation. LOT's objectives are to aid parents in educating and preparing African-American high school students for life in college and beyond, as exemplary corporate citizens.

There are over 30 active LOT chapters throughout the United States. The Philadelphia Chapter of LOT focuses on developing the business, communication and life skills of high school students from the Greater Philadelphia area to include South Jersey and Delaware.

Support the sustainability of this program through volunteerism, corporate sponsorship, and donations!

I recently moved to Philadelphia from Rhode Island to pursue my MBA at Drexel University. Having had successfully paid off my undergraduate student loans, I was again faced with the same concerns that many of my peers face; the risk of financial instability in the face of the soaring costs of higher education. Haphazardly, to the rescue came Terry Booker, a member of the NBMBAA who I was most fortunate to meet at a panel discussion at my University. He notified me of the NBMBAA scholarship opportunity and much to my dismay, I had missed the deadline for the application submission. I joined the organization and quickly sent an email to the organizations' board and was fortunate enough to be admitted into the application process. The NBMBAA is one of the few organizations that I have
